GROUPS DEMAND YALE UNIVERSITY END STUDENT COVID-19 BOOSTER MANDATE AT RALLY

Parents, students and activists question mandate for vaccine known to cause myocarditis in young people and proven not to stop transmission

WHO Parents, students and activists call on Yale University to drop its Covid-19 booster mandate for students, set to take effect on January 31, 2023. The rally will feature activists and students including Author and Yale University graduate Dr. Naomi Wolf, Pastor Dr. Aaron Lewis, Civil Rights Attorney Tricia Lindsay, Children's Health Defense New England Chapter Lead and Yale University graduate Leslie Embersits, Katherine Barlow of Turning Point USA, former University of Connecticut student turned activist Phoebe Liou, News Personality Kevin Alan and local college students.

WHAT Speakers will address how Yale University is mandating a booster which has been shown to cause vaccine-induced myocarditis in young people, especially 18-29 year olds. They will discuss how the booster is being mandated despite proof the vaccine does not stop transmission and address why the booster is being mandated for students but not faculty and staff. The advocacy groups will submit a petition to Yale University President Dr. Peter Salovey asking him to restore informed consent and choice to students and staff.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, there have been more than 1,000 reports of vaccine-related myocarditis or pericarditis in 18-29 year olds. Clinical trials are underway to study the connection. According to a study published in the November Vaccine, Canadian and international data shows myocarditis and pericarditis is heightened following Covid vaccination in those aged 18-39, especially in males aged 18-29 years "where the risk is several times higher". In January of this year, CDC Director Rochelle Walensky told CNN the Covid-19 vaccines are no longer effective at preventing transmission of the virus. So why is Yale University removing students' informed consent and mandating a vaccine which can cause cardiovascular harm and doesn't stop transmission?
